

A couple weeks ago I asked FCC Chairman Kevin Martin to require internet-phone companies like Vonage to directly connect callers to 911 dispatchers. Today the FCC voted 4-0 to institute that requirement. This is a big win for public safety. When callers in distress have to wait 15 minutes to get a 911 operator, lives are in serious danger. I applaud Chairman Martin for responding to our concerns.